DEVELOPMENTS CONCERNING GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES SINCE 1987

INTRODUCTION

The most recent official publication providing detailed information concerning the administrative divisions and geographical names of Russia remains the 1987 publication SSSR: Administrativno-Territorial'noye Deleniye Soyuznykh Respublik na 1 yanvarya 1987 goda. This publication, of course, dates back to the Soviet era when Russia was a constituent part of the now defunct Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

This present document attempts to provide as comprehensive a bank of information as possible on the developments since 1987 within the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (1987 to December 1991) and the independent Russian Federation (December 1991 to date). It is divided into five sections.

Section A

This first section provides a listing of the 89 first-order administrative divisions which exist within the structure of the Russian Federation. According to the constitution of the Federation, all these component units are of equal status. In practice, however, there is little doubt that the 21 republics are very much the first among equals whilst, at the other end of the spectrum, it is possible that a number of the autonomous okrugs have not fully taken up all the constitutional possibilities afforded to them as first-order divisions.

The administrative centres of the first-order divisions are also listed in Section A, together with population and locational information. The administrative division code supplied in the first column is for reference purposes within this document; it is applied consistently in all five sections.

Section B

This section provides a straightforward listing of the major cities of the Russian Federation, ranked according to population size and with the figure of 250,000 inhabitants taken as the cut-off point. The figures supplied relate strictly to the number of inhabitants within the boundaries of each city itself, and do not include any adjacent settlements which may be administratively attached to the city.

Section C

This third section forms by far the largest portion of this document, and lists approximately 200 name changes known to have taken place in Russia since 1987. A small number of changes from the period 1970-1987 has also been included. All the entries relate either to populated places or to administrative divisions, although changes involving alterations in the generic terminology of first-order administrative divisions (eg from Avtonomnaya Sovetskaya Sotsialisticheskaya Respublika to Respublika) have not been included. This section also contains entries for half a dozen features whose names, contrary to widespread belief outside Russia, have not changed. To facilitate interpretation of this section, all former names are displayed in italic type. Explanatory footnotes are included as necessary to amplify the information provided.

Section D

This section lists the 35 second-order divisions which have been created in Russia since 1987, plus one which has been administratively moved from one first-order division to another. The administrative centres are also provided, together with the date of the unit's creation, its population and relevant locational information. Note that 1996 is the most recent date for population figures relating to places within the Chechen Republic. In the Soviet era the term used for these divisions was exclusively rayon, but since the birth of the Russian Federation the terms natsional'nyy rayon and natsional'naya volost' have occasionally appeared as well. Likewise, within second-order divisions, the rural unit is no longer exclusively the sel'sovet; it may be a volost' or a sel'skiy okrug, or what is termed an "organ of local self-government" such as the ulus found in the republics of Buryatiya and Sakha.

Section E

The final section of this document list the 43 settlements which have been created since 1987. These are all entirely new; the list does not include the far greater number of settlements which existed before 1987 but have been upgraded in status since then. The date of each settlement's establishment is provided, together with population and locational information. Most of the settlements are classed as being a "settlement of town type" (posëlok gorodskogo tipa: PGT); the majority of these were alternatively classed as a "working settlement" (rabochiy posëlok) until 1995, when that term was abolished. It is noticeable that, since the creation of the Russian Federation, the total number of PGTs appears to be in a continuing decline.

Please note that, to complete the picture of developments concerning geographical names in the Russian Federation since 1987, reference should also be made to the companion PCGN document Closed Settlements of the Russian Federation, compiled in January 1999.
